Greatness is measured in what you give, not in what you take.

Trump's "America First" slogan was controversial because it conjures up a history of isolationism and discrimination. Opponents and historians questioned if he was using the slogan as code to pander to those who harbor these sentiments. We'll never know his true intentions because he fabricates lies and denies reality so often. But it is clear five months into his presidency that "America First" does not include the economically and socially under-served and disadvantaged citizens struggling to make America great.

Despite all his promises of fairness, the majority of Americans would be forced into Trump's no-health-care plan, which would discriminate against the less fortunate while transferring billions of dollars to the wealthy. It's evident that Trump's "America First" was code to millionaires, billionaires and corporations, who will continue to prosper at the expense of the rest of us.

Our state lawmakers should act in the spirit of the Independent Man who faithfully watches over our state and citizens, and pass the Market Stability and Consumer Protection Act. The health and welfare of all of us are at stake.

Thomas Wojick
